mankind!
All along the woods skirting the clear-ed fields at the southeastern foot of the hill: in the hollows and ravines to the right, and away to the left, upon and beyoud the Lafayette road, the rebel legious were seen gathering for the onset.

Just before the storm broke, the brave and high-souted Garfield was perceived making his way to the headquarters of Gen. Thomas. He had come to be present at the final contest, and, in order to do so, had rode all the way from Chattanoogs, passing through a fiery ordeal upon the road. His horse was shot under him, and his orderly was killed by his side. Still he had come through, he scarcely knew how, and here he was to inspire fresh courage into the heart; of the brave soldiers who were holding the enemy at bay, to bring them words of greeting from Goneral Rosecrans, and to inform them that the latter was reorganizing the scattered troops, and, as fast as possible, would harry them forward to their relief.

At last a shell came hurtling through the air, and burst with a loud explosion over the hill. This was the signal for rebel attack, and at once the bullets flew thick and fast amongst us. My companion, the correspondent of the New York Herald, was struck by a spent ball and tumbled from his horse, and although both he and I thought the chances were bad against our living to describe the contest, we felt that we could not do aught than watch it to its close. Just upon the side of the hill to the left, and in the rear of the still smoking ruins of the house, was gathered a group whose names are destined to beome historical — Thomas, Whitaker, Granger, Garfield, Steadman, Wood. Calmiy they watched the progress of the tempest, speculated upon its duration and strength, and devised methods to break its fury. The future annalist will de-light to dwell upon the characteristics and schievements of each member of this group, and even the historian of the present, hestoing to the comple i in of his task, is constrained to pause a moment, if only to repeat their names—Whitaker, Garfield, Granger, Thomas, Steadman,

The fight around the hill now raged with terror inexperienced before, even upon this terrible day. Our soldiers were formed in two lines, and as each marched up to the crest and fired a dead-ly volley at the advancing foe, it fell back a lit le ways, the men lay down upon the ground to load their guns, and the second line advanced to take their place! They, too, in their turn retired, and thus the lines kept marching back and forth, and delivering their withering volleys till the very brain grew dizzy as it watched them. And all the time not a man wavered. Every motion was executed with as much precision as though cuted with as much precision as though the troops were on a holiday parade, nothwithstanding the flower of the rebel army were swarming around the foot of the hill, and a score of cannon were thundering from three sides upon it Every attempt of the enemy to scale it was repulsed, and the gallant Harker looked with pride upon his lines, standing or lying, just where they were when the fight began.

But our troops are no longer satisfied with the defensive. Gen. Tuchin, at the bead of his brigade, charged into the rebel lines and cut his way out again, bringing with him three hundred prison-Other portions of this brave band followed Turchin's example, until the legions of the enemy were fairly driven back to the ground they occupied previous to commencing the last fight. Thus did twelve or fifteen thousand men animated by heroic impulses and inspired by worthy leaders, save from destruction the Army of the Cumberland. Let the nation honor them as they deserve.

At night General Thomas fell back to Rossville, four miles from Chattanoogs, around and in which city the army lies to-night.

Our losses have been most severe, and can scarcely fall short of 1700 killed, and 8,000 wounded. Col. Burnett tells me that our loss in artillery will not fall short of fifty pieces. Our deficiency in transportation and baggage cannot now be estimated.

But the enemy has suffered as severely as we in that which he can least affordhuman life and limb. He intended by massing all his available forces together to annihilate the Army of the Cumberland. He has failed to do so, and, al-though it would be childlish to deny or conceal our own fearful losses, yet we may console ourselves by the assurance that in his circumstances his failure to destroy us is for us a signal victory, and for him an irreparable defeat.

Headquarters Commissioner for the Organization of U.S. Colored Troops, Mashville, Tonn.
